So Loved the World that He Gave His Own Only Begotten Son

A highly creative piece, Andrei Rublev's Troitsa (Russian for Triune or Trinity), pictured above, hails from a more-than-thousand-year-old iconographic tradition. It is a Trinitarian interpretation of Gen 18:7-16, the episode in which "three men" visit Abraham and Sarah and promise them a son.

St. Andrei Rublev painted it around 1425 in Russia. He was a monk, and he created this icon to honor his spiritual father, St. Sergius of Radonezh. What makes it remarkable isn't just its beauty. It's that Rublev did something no one had quite done before: he painted the three angels as perfectly equal, making visible what we confess about the Trinity, three Persons, one God, none greater or lesser than the others.

The icon shows three angels around a table with a chalice.

But this isn't just a dinner scene. The three angels represent the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit. Rublev stripped away Abraham, Sarah, the tent, the servants, all the narrative details from Genesis. He wanted you to see the Trinity itself.

The three angels represent the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit. Rublev stripped away Abraham, Sarah, the tent, the servants, all the narrative details from Genesis. He wanted you to see the Trinity itself, not just a story about hospitality.

God is eternally a communion of love, Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, and creation itself flows from that love. Salvation means being brought into that divine life, becoming "partakers of the divine nature" as St. Peter writes. And there's an opening in that circle. You're invited in.
